GOTHIC NOW IN FAVOR

Eleven Years Ago Washington Voted for Romanesque.

Dr. R. H. McKim, in Article Published in 1895, Points Out Why Episcopal Cathedral Should Be in Pointed Architecture-Inspires of Itself Deep Religious Feeling.

The decision of the Washington diocese of the Episcopal Church to follow the change in opinions regarding church architecture in the last few years. In commenting on this, Dr. R. H. Mc-Kim, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, points out that when the ques tion of erecting a cathedral in Washington first came up eleven years ago, the majority of the clergymen in the city were in favor of the Romanesque. In fact, a vote taken at that time showed but one other Episcopal minister besides Dr. McKim as an advocate of the Gothic. Yet when the matter came up for final lecision last week, the decision in favor had its characteristic development on English soil from the time of Henry II. (1154) to the close of the reign of Henry VIII (1546), a period of about 400 years And it is a striking and significant fact, which I have never seen noticed by any writer on the subject, that this developnent of Anglo-Gothic architecture did not begin until the various composite ele ments that make up the English race had been blended into one. It is the English national style, and comes to us, like the language and the literature of the race

Multitudes f Gothic churches and abbeys, as well many of the cathedrals of old Engand, to go no farther, furnish the suffient and conclusive refutation of that sition, as churchmen who have traveled England extensively do not need to be told. In regard to acoustics, many a cathedral nave can vie with St. Paul's in scating a vast congregation within hearing of the preacher. It is by no means a settled question that the space beneath a Renaissance dome is better adapted for a preaching service than th nave or the transepts of a Gothic cathe-
